

Information for MIDE applicants

General information on the programme

The Master's in International and Development Economics has been established for students who have a first degree in economics/ business administration or in other social sciences with a focus on economics. It is designed to enhance understanding of development economics, the international economic context in which socio-economic development takes place, and of key sectors and policy areas that are relevant for developing countries, with a particular focus on agriculture and financial institutions. In order to understand the challenges of formulating current development policies, the programme covers both the principal theoretical debates as well as specific contemporary examples of strategies, policies and projects.

Promoting a sustainable development in an unequal world

- What does 'globalisation' really amount to? Does it benefit developing countries, or lead to widening differences between rich and poor?
- Should developing countries completely open up their economies to international trade and capital flows?
- What are the lessons for development countries of the 'Asian Miracle'? ... the transition debacle in Russia? ... or Argentina's financial crisis?
- What specific policies are required to promote key sectors, such as agriculture, finance and public administration?
- Do poverty reduction strategies, as advocated by the World Bank, help the poor or contribute to their problems, as some critics allege?

These are some of the issues that will be covered in this Master's programme, which will provide students with a comprehensive understanding of the current debates in international and development economics.

Scholarships

The German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD) grants a limited number of scholarships covering living expenses (service fees will be waived).

To be eligible to apply for the DAAD scholarship, applicants must:

- be from a developing or transition country and
- have two or more years of professional experience after graduation in a related field

To apply for the scholarship, please complete the DAAD application form (Application for Research Grants and Study Scholarships) that is downloadable from www.mide.htw-berlin.de and attach it together with the online application form.

Applicants for a scholarship will be selected by the DAAD in co-operation with the HTW Berlin.

As competition for the DAAD scholarship is rather intense, we do recommend applicants to also look into other options of funding, i.e. via <http://www.daad.de/deutschland/stipendium/en/> or funding opportunities in their respective home countries.
